President Bush visits Albuquerque

President George W. Bush waves at onlookers as he enters Air Force One preparing for his departure Tuesday. He arrived here Monday and spent the night at a local hotel. Tuesday he spoke at the Albuquerque Convention Center in the Kiva Auditorium and visited an Albuquerque retirement center. This was President Bush's first visit to Albuquerque this year.

We did it!

2nd Lt. Devanie Bridges, 377th Services Squadron, hugs Robert Vick, corporate executive officer of Vick's Vittles, the dining facility food service contractor, after Col. Hank Andrews, 377th Air Base Wing commander, announced that the Thunderbird Inn had won the 2004 John L. Hennessy Trophy on Wednesday. Tech. Sgt. Brenda McLain, food services superintendent, is at the right. The trophy is presented to the best dining facility in the Air Force by the National Restaurant Association, the Society of Food Service Management and the International Food Services Executives. See next week's Nucleus for more about this major win and the Thunderbird Inn.
